Say it again. Repeat after me. I'll bury you on a day it's raining. Lily is a first-generation immigrant in a family of unapologetic women. Throughout the story, Lily and her family must come face-to-face with their own truths, which begin as fragmented pieces that are slowly assembled over the course of their lifetimes. The characters in After the Rain are terrible, angry, feminine, tender—they demand to be seen and heard. And as Lily learns the story of her family and watches her Amah die, she comes closer to understanding how her family wants and needs to be loved. In After the Rain, readers will join author Angeline Truong as she explores grief, cultural barriers, and her Vietnamese-American identity. Truong strings together her own experiences, her people's experiences, and her dreams in order to excavate and understand her family's history, as well as her own identity.

The poems in this collection concatenate myriad of happenings in life which, though may take a similar course, do not leave us to grin and grimace at the same time. The turn of events in life, like rain, offers mixed feelings which may be pleasant or otherwise. Though rain comes with peaceful breeze and great equanimity, sometimes it does not usually come with that “expected” gift of grace. Occasionally, we may have to rejoice and sometimes count our losses. As

With the ease of rainfall, the poems flow with the truths of the common life of the postcolonial subjects in a world of their own.

The Sky After Rain might remind readers of John Hawkes's The Lime Twig for its darkness and plot obscurity, of William Gass's novella "The Pedersen Kid" in its repetitive themes, and of William Faulkner's use of multiple narrators in As I Lay Dying.
