This book focuses on vehicles for enhancing training in government organizations by stressing the importance of the value added to organizations when its training functions efforts are effectively planned and managed. This book avoids reworking ground that has been adequately covered in other professional training books and periodical literature. Rather it highlights the forces that must be managed by training personnel if they are to improve each employee's performance and their organization's overall productivity. The intent of the book is to help those responsible for training in organizations better understand and manage those forces that affect the training operation, while also articulating the need to improve the perception of training in organizations in general. Combining a discussion on planning, forecasting, training needs analysis, the training manager's and staff's role in organizational change, marketing training efforts, and the importance of training in general, the author offers useful insights.

This book offers a controversial reanalysis of the rise and dominance of managerialist approaches to development. Linking two British inner-city community development projects with projects in the developing world it shows how 'managed development' runs counter to participatory values and aspirations of communities receiving development aid. This, in effect, mutes the voices of these communities. In conclusion, Holmes draws implications for the emerging community development agenda in urban development throughout the world.

The Department for Education is distributing £56.4 billion in 2011-12 to schools, local authorities and other public bodies for the delivery of education and children's services in England. The Department has set out how it intends to provide Parliament with assurance about the regularity, propriety and value for money in an Accountability System Statement (the Statement) of which the Committee has now seen three drafts. Responsibility for value for money is shared by the Department with schools, academy trusts, local authorities, the Young People's Learning Agency and the Department for Communities and Local Government. However, the Statement does not yet clearly describe the specific responsibilities of each body, how these will interact, or how the Department will assess value for money across the entire education system. The Department relies on local authorities and the YPLA to exercise financial oversight over local authority maintained schools and academies respectively. However, oversight by some local authorities is currently weak and could worsen as many authorities reduce the resources they devote to overseeing their schools. There are also concerns about whether the YPLA will have the right skills, systems and capacity to oversee the rapidly increasing numbers of academies expected in coming years. More consistent requirements for data and data returns must be applied to all schools so that academic and financial performance can be benchmarked, and all schools can be held accountable. The Department needs to enforce these requirements more stringently, particularly given previous problems with lack of compliance
