Arts of Engagement focuses on the role that music, film, visual art, and Indigenous cultural practices play in and beyond Canada's Truth and Reconciliation Commission on Indian Residential Schools. Contributors here examine the impact of aesthetic and sensory experience in residential school history, at TRC national and community events, and in artwork and exhibitions not affiliated with the TRC. Using the framework of "aesthetic action," the essays expand the frame of aesthetics to include visual, aural, and kinetic sensory experience, and question the ways in which key components of reconciliation such as apology and witnessing have social and political effects for residential school survivors, intergenerational survivors, and settler publics. This volume makes an important contribution to the discourse on reconciliation in Canada by examining how aesthetic and sensory interventions offer alternative forms of political action and healing. These forms of aesthetic action encompass both sensory appeals to empathize and invitations to join together in alliance and new relationships as well as refusals to follow the normative scripts of reconciliation. Such refusals are important in their assertion of new terms for conciliation, terms that resist the imperatives of reconciliation as a form of resolution. This collection charts new ground by detailing the aesthetic grammars of reconciliation and conciliation. The authors document the efficacies of the TRC for the various Indigenous and settler publics it has addressed, and consider the future aesthetic actions that must be taken in order to move beyond what many have identified as the TRC's political limitations.

In this book she focuses on her own work, tackling such aspects as subject matter, background and sources, as well as its critical reception, and art and painting in general. Included are texts ranging from aphorisms and short poetic pieces to longer analytical texts.

Meet Romeo - not quite as romantic as his name implies. He's an ex wrestler who has come to realize everything he's ever done has been for show. Meet Tess- not quite a people person. She's been overlooked and underestimated most of her life. He is overly positive. She's a born cynic. He works out. She vegs out. He aggravates her. She amuses him. They've spent years taunting each other and ignoring their attraction, now they live under the same roof. She can't leave and for reasons she doesn't understand, he won't. SWEET NOTHINGS is a lighthearted romance and currently the second of two books in my Sweet Series. Both books can be read as stand-alones and have a guaranteed happily-ever-after! Sweet Nothings has it all: silk ribbon, Venetian lace, the best bra fitter in town... and two unsolved murders. Emma Taylor thought she knew what to expect when she abandoned life as a big-city fashionista to help her aunt, Arabella, breathe new style into Sweet Nothings, her waning lingerie boutique. As Emma settles back in to Paris, Tennessee—a world where pie is served with a parable and a pitcher of sweet tea is the cure for most of life's ills—her escape seems smooth as silk. But when the town acquires a touch of unneeded je ne sais quoi with the arrival of Emma's philandering ex, an unseemly murder turns her world inside out. As the police's top suspect, Emma is going to need more than fishnets to snare the real killer. And when she and Arabella refuse to let death threats wrapped in knifed nighties stall Sweet Nothings' vintage lingerie fashion show, it becomes increasingly clear that any garter may hide a gun and that bullet bras might have to live up to their name...

EMMYMy fall from grace was one for the books. All it took was his word against mine for everything to topple.Liar. Slut. Except, he's the one who irrevocably broke me-my heart, my body, my soul...my will to live.STERLINGLike a little coward, she thinks the span of five states is enough to keep her safe. But I know where she is and I'm going to make her pay.She ruined my best friend's life. Now...I'm going to ruin her.One by one, I'll spill her secrets, until she has nowhere left to turn-except to me, her very own big, bad wolf.

Five years ago, we'd been together and on fire, but the flames burned us both. Now she's back in my life and is all my wildest fantasies in the flesh. I want her. The desire is too powerful to argue against, but I'm not interested in what we had. This is an arrangement about pleasure and finding out who we are behind closed doors. There won't be talk of love or any sweet nothings whispered by either of us. This time, I'll control the heat between us and make sure neither of our hearts get too close to the flames.

Finding the Sweet Spot walks people of all skill and experience levels through simple and proven techniques that are sure to result in better outcomes for all parties and that uncover the hidden value that exists in any negotiation. When most people think that "little girls should be seen and not heard," a noisy, riotous scream can be revolutionary. But that's not the case anymore. (Cis/Het/White) Girls aren't supposed to be virginal, passive objects, but Poly-Styrene-like sirens who scream back in spectacularly noisy and transgressive ways as they "Lean In." Resilience is the new, neoliberal feminine ideal: real women overcome all the objectification and silencing that impeded their foremothers. Resilience discourse incites noisy damage, like screams, so that it can be recycled for a profit. It turns the crises posed by avant-garde noise, feminist critique, and black aesthetics into opportunities for strengthening the vitality of multi-racial white supremacist patriarchy (MRWaSP). Reading contemporary pop music – Lady Gaga, Beyonce, Calvin Harris – with and against political philosophers like Michel Foucault, feminists like Patricia Hill Collins, and media theorists like Steven Shaviro, /Resilience & Melancholy/ shows how resilience discourse manifests in both pop music and in feminist politics. In particular, it argues that resilient femininity is a post-feminist strategy for producing post-race white supremacy. Resilience discourse allows women to "Lean In" to MRWaSP privilege because their overcoming and leaning-in actively produce blackness as exception, as pathology, as death. The book also considers alternatives to resilience found in the work of Beyonce, Rihanna, and Atari Teenage Riot. Updating Freud, James calls these pathological, diseased iterations of resilience “melancholy.” Melancholy makes resilience unprofitable, that is, incapable of generating enough surplus value to keep MRWaSP capitalism healthy. Investing in the things that resilience discourse renders exceptional, melancholic siren songs like Rihanna’s “Diamonds” steer us off course, away from resilient “life” and into the death.

Maybe it will make him come up for air and enjoy life. If anyone ever needed that, it would be Luke. When that doesn't seem to work, she gets up the nerve to talk to Luke instead. Finally, Luke sees something other than his phone. What he sees is beauty so incredible it takes his breath away. What he sees is Kinsley and he's not letting her get away. She's meant to be his. In SWEET NOTHING, Pritts writes that he keeps "being so / surprised by the happening / that is happening," and the reader will be too. Written in wonder and astonishment, these poems are sweet nothings to the temporary, to the various loves that come and go, to the "already & again" we find ourselves in. The book opens by asking what matters, and throughout the collection it makes the case time and again that a life lived fully, an all-or-nothing approach--even when it blows up--just may be enough. Gina Myers - With Sweet Nothing, Nate Pritts skydives (even more resolutely than he has in the past) into a Whit/man-ic poetics of me and you together (not "me versus you," not "us versus them," and certainly not "me so much smarter than everybody else"). These poems go one word, one greeting, one feeling to the next. They were written particularly for all of us. They call us to action-to poems of our own and more importantly to HUMAN BEING yesterday, tomorrow, and right now-however difficult it may be, whatever the cost, with joy at the prospect of making a connection. From the beginning, language has played an important role in the work of Marlene Dumas. Her earliest collages make use of text, and she often writes poetical monikers or captions directly onto her drawings, such as "The Eyes of the Night Creatures" or "Miss Interpreted." Over the last 30 years, the artist has written texts ranging from aphorisms, statements and short poetic pieces to longer analytical essays. Her writing focuses on her own work, discussing its subject matter, its politics, background and source material, as well as its critical reception and her own cultural position as an artist. "I am always 'not from here,'" she writes in one text (a poem), "even though I try to know / or understand 'what's going on' and / what the rules are and how they / keep on changing and what that means. / When looking at images I'm not lost, / but I'm uneasy." Sweet Nothings, originally published in a long out-of-print (and rare) Dutch edition in 1998 and now revised and expanded, provides a selection of her best and most representative writings from 1982-2014. Marlene Dumas (born 1953) is a South African artist who works in a range of media including painting, collage and prints. She moved to Amsterdam for her studies in 1976 and continues to live and work there. She often strips her subjects of their original contexts, working with-while often transgressing and deconstructing-traditional Western modes of representation. She represented the Netherlands in 1995 at the 46th Venice Biennale, and has enjoyed numerous solo museum exhibitions and retrospectives devoted to her work around the world since then.

Set on the dark side of Los Angeles, the masterful new collection from an award-winning and highly praised "natural-born storyteller" (Ron Rash). In these gripping and intense stories, Richard Lange returns to the form that first landed him on the literary map. These are edge-of-your-seat tales: A prison guard must protect an inmate being tried for heinous crimes. A father and son set out to rescue a young couple trapped during a wildfire. An ex-con trying to make good as a security guard stumbles onto a burglary plot. A young father must submit to blackmail to protect the fragile life he's built. SWEET NOTHING is an unforgettable collection that shows once again why T.C. Boyle wrote, "Lange's stories combine the truth-telling and immediacy of Raymond Carver with the casual hip of Denis Johnson. There is a potent artistic sensibility at work here" (on Dead Boys).

The play premieres at the Young Vic, London, in March 2010. 'I write of love and death. What other subjects are there?' Arthur Schnitzler.
