This book sets out to celebrate physical education and sport, and by doing so, encourage the educational establishment to embrace the subject area as a vehicle for the complete development of the individual. In addition, it shows that the benefits of physical activity far outweigh the shallow claims of populous magazines - there are benefits for the individual, the community and for society as a whole. Laker contends that the importance of physical education and sport in many areas of social life has been overlooked at best, and misused at worst. Physical activity has a vast contribution to make, not only as a topic of small talk on a Monday morning, but also to the personal and social development of individuals and possibly to the well-being of the global community as a whole. This book explores the land 'beyond the boundaries of the game.'

Abstract: Dissatisfaction with the outcomes of traditional physical education has been a recurrent theme in the literature at least two decades. Central to the problems of traditional physical education has been ineffective game instruction. Recently, there have been a number of studies focusing on how to teach students the tactics of game play. Initial studies have failed to validate proposed instructional models. The purpose of this investigation was to examine the effects of tactic-focused instruction using technique-focused instruction as baseline on the 7th and 8th grade students' game performance, and to assess generalization effects from teaching scrimmages to scrimmages in tag rugby. Lessons were designed to provide good pedagogical examples of each instructional condition. The conditions were assessed using a multiple baseline design across two classes with a third class serving as a control. Four target students were selected from each class (n=12). The dependent variable was the percentage of correct "supporting movements" occurring during scrimmages. Results show that low skilled female and male students, and average skilled female students improved their percentage of supporting movements after the tactic-focused instruction was implemented. There were no intervention effects for average skilled male students, however, these students demonstrated practice effects during baseline. In addition, generalization from teaching scrimmages to scrimmages occurred for all student groups except average skilled males. This study contributes to the literature in three ways. First, this study demonstrates that it was possible to explicitly teach and improve the tactical performance of students. Second, this study demonstrates generalization from practice to games in physical education providing a validation of the pedagogy assessed in this study. Third, data shows that low skilled students, and in particular female students, can acquire tactical skills within an instructional unit and participate as active and successful participants in game play.

Sports betting is the general activity of predicting sports results by making a wager on the outcome of a sporting event. Aside from simple wagers--betting a friend that one's favorite baseball team will win its division, for instance, or buying a football "square" for the Super Bowl--sports betting is commonly done through a bookmaker. Bookmakers generally offer two types of wagers on the winner of a sporting event: a straight-up or money line bet, or a point spread wager. Moneylines and straight-up prices are used to set odds on sports such as soccer, baseball and hockey (the scoring nature of which renders point spreads impractical) as well as individual vs. individual matches, like boxing.

Anthony Dowson is back with More Fun and Games. The book he coauthored in 2005, Fun and Games, was a big hit with teachers, coaches, and all activity leaders who work with kids. Dowson's new book continues the premise from the first book—that children's physical activity games need to be fun and creative as well as developmentally sound. But Dowson doesn't stop there. For each of the 100 new games this expert physical education teacher and coach offers, he adds a pop-out box that notes the skills and fitness components the game will help kids develop. More Fun and Games covers warm-up, cool-down, and multisport games, as well as games for the following sports: soccer, cricket, basketball, tennis, netball, rugby, volleyball, badminton, and hockey. Each game includes information on equipment required, rules, and coaching advice. The games are easy to set up, require minimal equipment, and come with suggestions for adapting the games to suit not only the size of your group but also the skill level. And you can easily find the right game for your group by using the game finder section. These entertaining games and activities maximize participation while developing key skills, such as decision making, teamwork, attacking, and defending. By developing the technical skills they need in order to succeed in sports, kids will also develop greater self-confidence and enjoy their sport participation all the more. The games are crafted to help the kids stay focused, remain active, and have fun. The result is that they develop not only their motor skills and sport-specific skills but also positive attitudes toward physical activity. They'll have loads of fun with these games and want to come back for more, and they'll be on their way to establishing lifelong physical activity habits through More Fun and Games. Catherine Spencer was the captain of the England women's rugby team for three years. She scored eighteen tries for England, won six of the eight Six Nations competitions she took part in, and captained her team to three championship titles, a European cup, two Nations Cup tournament victories and the World Cup final held on home soil in 2010, which thrust women's rugby into the limelight. All of this while holding down a full time job, because the women's team, unlike the men's, did not get paid for their sport. Mud, Maul, Mascara is an effort to reconcile alleged opposites, to show the woman behind the international sporting success. Painfully honest about the mental struggles Catherine faced during, and after, her career as an elite athlete, it is also warm, funny and inspirational – a book for anyone who has ever had a dream, or self-doubt, or a yearning for a really good, mud-proof mascara.
